

but the old ladies still come to market with steamed tamales wrapped in corn husks the way they were when the Aztecs built their pyramids on the plateau that is now Mexico City.

That's not much of an appetizer, and I am digressing again. But I want it to be a surprise. Come back when you have loaded the source listing on tape and we'll go on to the next chapter.